compromise and accommodation (pp. 143, 144). However, to compromise on such fundamentals as the principle of free and equal access to information as a public right will send the profession further down the slippery slope of entrepreneurial librarianship toward the final dissolution of whatever potential the library may have had as a public sphere of democratic inquiry and social dialogue. Given the stakes, one would have hoped for more of a critical intervention from Harris and Hannah and less of a bland survey.

NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS

Henry T. Blanke is a reference librarian at Marymount Manhattan College in New York City and co-editor of Progressive Librarian.

John Budd is a faculty member of the School of Library and Informational Science at the University of Missouri-Columbia. His most recent book is The Library & Its Users: The Communication Process published in 1992 by Ablex.

Jessica Grim is a reference librarian at Oberlin College, and has published several books of poetry, including Locale (Potes & Poets Press, 1995) and The Inveterate Life (O Books, 1991). "Searches..." was read publically at the Ear Inn in New York City on November 11, 1995.

Stan A. Hannah and Michael H. Harris are both on the faculty of the College of Library and Information Science at the University of Kentucky in Lexington. Their book Into the Future: The Foundations of Library and Information Services in the Post-Industrial Era was published by Ablex in 1993.

Elaine Harger is the librarian at the Empire State College School of Labor Studies and managing editor of Progressive Librarian.

Roma Harris is a professor at the Graduate School of Library and Information Science and Registrar and Vice President for Academic Affairs at the University of Western Ontario. She is the author of Librarianship: The Erosion of a Women's Profession (Ablex, 1993) and Barriers to Information: How Formal Help Systems Fail Battered Women (Greenwood, 1994).

Al Kagan is the bibliographer for Africana studies at the University of Illinois-Urbana/Champaign.

Michael Malinconico is EBSCO Professor of Information Studies at the University of Alabama.