NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS

Lincoln Cushing is a graphic artist and cultural organizer living in Berkeley, California. He has been working with Inkworks Press, a worker-owned and operated offset printshop, for the past 17 years.

Sandy Iverson has worked as a librarian for non-profit educational organizations for over 10 years. She holds an undergraduate degree in library studies, a Masters degree in adult education and is working hard to complete her MLIS while managing the library for the Canadian College of Naturopathic Medicine in Toronto Canada, and raising her four year old daughter. She maintains an active research interest in the role of information and information literacy in the adult education process. She is particularly concerned with the development of educational programs and policies that would facilitate the acquisition of information skills for typically marginalized populations.

Johnny Jacobs directs the Tygerburg Library District in South Africa and is a LIWO activist.

E. J. Josey is a past-president of the American Library Association, a founder of the Black Caucus of ALA, and professor emeritus of the School of Information Sciences at the University of Pittsburgh.

Steven Joyce is at the University of Alberta in Canada.

Martyn Lowe is a co-founder and editorial board member of Information for Social Change. He has been involved within the peace movement since 1968, a vegetarian since 1970, and has worked in libraries since 1972. He currently works in North East London for Waltham Forest Libraries.

Frauke Mährt-Thomsen attended Library School in Berlin from 1964 until 1967 when she began working in the Public Library System of Berlin-Kreuzberg. For many years she has been the head librarian of the Bona-Peiser-Bibliothek, a neighbourhood library in the socially deprived district of Kreuzberg with a high degree of unemployed and welfare people. For more than 15 years she's been a member of the Berlin History Workshop and has written about the Berlin Public Library and women librarians' history. Currently she is working on a thesis on pioneer German woman librarian, Bona Peiser, at the Institute of Library Science of the Humboldt University in Berlin.
